

Call for Papers for the International Human Rights Law Review (2012)

The International Human Rights Law Review is a bi-annual peer-reviewed journal. It aims to stimulate research and thinking on contemporary human rights issues, problems, challenges and policies. It is particularly interested in soliciting papers, whether in the legal domain or other social sciences, that are unique in their approach and which seek to address poignant concerns of our times. One of the principal aims of the Journal is to provide an outlet to human rights scholars, practitioners and activists in the developing world who have something tangible to say about their experiences on the ground, or in order to discuss cases and practices that are generally inaccessible to European and North-American audiences. The Editorial Board and the publisher are keen to work hands-on with such contributors and to help find solutions where necessary to facilitate translation or language editing in respect of accepted articles.

The journal is aimed at academics, students, government officials, human rights practitioners, and lawyers working in the area, as well as individuals and organisations interested in the areas of human rights law. The Journal publishes critical articles that consider human rights law, policy and practice in their various contexts, at global, regional, sub-regional and national levels; book reviews; and a section focused on an up-to-date appraisal of important jurisprudence and practice of the United Nations and regional human rights systems including those in the developing world.

The Editorial Board welcomes both longer in-depth articles (normally between 10,000 and 15,000 words in length, including abstract and footnotes) and shorter notes and commentaries (about 5000 words) analysing major recent human rights issues and developments.

Articles for consideration should be written in English submitted as an email attachment (Word or Word compatible) to Dr Manisuli Ssenyonjo, email: manisuli.ssenyonjo@brunel.ac.uk

Alternatively, a hard copy of the manuscript could be sent by post to the editorial offices, addressed to:
